To all Parents/Carers,

Wow – it has been seriously cold this week! Despite the predictions last week, we have dodged a lot of the snow and instead had some absolutely stunning blue skies and bright sunshine. Perfect weather for the outdoors and all it has to offer!

Speaking of which, top left we have yet more photos from our continuous provision in Y1. In case you missed it, continuous provision (or freeflow as you may have heard it called before) is new to Y1 and is something we decided to do in order to give children the most beneficial and enjoyable start to their early years at Markeaton. Wind, rain or shine, the children are outdoors enjoying the environment and this week was no different.

The same goes for bottom left. Children this term in Y2 have been learning about weather. Here we can see them setting up some instruments; including constructing their very own anemometers (wind socks).

Middle left, one of my fave tweets this week, children getting to grips with how long the Sutton Hoo burial ship was. What better way to do that than lie down in the corridor, toe to head, and see how enormous it was (22 children in total!!!).

And finally, our responses to the comments that were made in the recent RSE survey can be found on the website. Thanks again for all your input on this – it is much appreciated 😊
